parch with thirst bending near a running stream.

Particularly husband and wife should not play at hide-and-seek where love is concerned. Sometimes we hide a lovely jewel and lose it. Sometimes love is like a precious metal in the depths of the earth, so much digging and delving is needed to find it that life passes away and it is never found.

Love in the home leads to good manners. If the barriers of kindness and pretty, affectionate ways are once broken down and plain speaking induged in a form of household hooliganism and lack of courteey soon becomes the fashion. A wife will forgive her husband almost anything, and a husband fashion. A wife will forgive her hus-band almost anything, and a husband will overlook and pardon extravagance, had housekeeping and most faults fem-inine flesh is heiress to, but neither for-gets and seldom forgives an attack of plain speaking, when all sorts of rough, hard things are said which rankle in the heart and memory for many years.— Tablet.
